Track Flags
The solid green flag is displayed to indicate the start of a session. During a session, it is displayed at the end of a caution period to indicate that the session is restarting.
The solid yellow flag, or caution flag, universally requires drivers to slow down due to a hazard on the track. When shown at a station, drivers are prohibited from passing until either the hazard or the next flag station displaying a green flag is passed.
The yellow and red striped flag is displayed stationary at local flag stations to indicate that there is something on the track which could reduce grip or cause a car to lose control
The solid red flag is displayed when conditions are unsafe to continue the session. Cars must proceed safely to the nearest safe spot on the track within view of a corner worker and stop. The corner worker will direct you when it's safe to proceed
The solid black flag is used to summon a driver to the pits. Black flags can be waved at all observation posts simultaneously to order all drivers to clear the track.
A blue flag with a diagonal yellow stripe informs a driver that a faster car(s) is approaching and that the driver should allow one or more faster cars to pass.
The checkered flag is displayed at the finish line to indicate that the current session has been completed. Upon seeing the checkered flag and crossing the finish line, drivers should ease off the gas gently and continue around the track for their cool down lap.
